Conservative Rabbinate Assembly Meets To Discuss Problems And Progress

A leading religious philosopher of Conservative Judaism asserted at Kiamesha Lake, N. Y., that Jewishness of American Jews was "only skin deep." He suggested a program to enable Jewish life to recover its spiritual character. Dr. Mordecai Kaplan, professor of philosophies of religion at the Jewish Theological Seminary, in New York, and a distinguished religious theoretician, told the annual convention of the Rabbinical Assembly of America, at the Concord Hotel, that there was no intrinsic connection between Jewish life and spirituality.

"One-half of Jewish identity," he said, "is the product of Gentile exclusiveness, and the other half is the product of Jewish association," says the New York Times. Dr. Kaplan told 400 leaders of Conservative Judaism that for the proper spirituality to exist in Jewish life, Jews have to "achieve a conception of God that makes sense, and is intrinsically related to the historic experiences of the Jewish people as well as to its course of action in the future."

Discussing conceptions of God, Dr. Kaplan said that the secularist Jews denied that any values other than common political and cultural ones were necessary for the future of the Jewish people. He also said that the Orthodox conception of God "does not make sense because it is based on the assumption that the miraculous events recorded in the Bible are the most authentic evidences of His existence.

"The Reform conception of God as embodied in ethical monotheism is indeed related to the past of the Jews. Though it makes sense, it points to no specific course of future action for the Jewish people as constituting its destiny. One therefore does not have to be a Jew to live by it.

"The Conservative group recognizes that a definite conception of God is indispensable, but has given little or no thought as to what it should be. It is emotionally compounded of nostalgia for the Orthodox Jew and complacency with the Reform view."

Dr. Kaplan said that for Jewish life to recover its spiritual character, Jews must explore anew their peoplehood and follow these religious imperatives:

Rehabilitation of Israel as the spiritual homeland of the Jewish people; establishment of a permanent advisory body that would speak to the entire Jewish people on spiritual unity; establishment of organic Jewish communities through creative inter-action among Jewish organizations to eliminate "currently rasping paradoxes" from Jewish life; spread knowledge of Hebrew and revitalize Sabbaths and festivals, for "a Sabbathless people cannot possibly cultivate the life of the spirit."

Rabbi Isaac D. Klein, of Buffalo, president of the Rabbinical Assembly, hailed the emergence of the day school, which combines secular and Jewish education at primary and secondary levels, says the New York Times. He said that this type of school, virtually unknown a half-century ago, was "a unique American creation in answer to a specifically American problem." There are more than 230 day schools on this continent today.

Rabbi Abraham E. Millgram, director of the Commission on Jewish Education of the United Synagogue of America, told the Rabbinate of Conservative Judaism that the religious schools were experiencing only limited success in teaching children the art of prayer.

A plea to the rabbinate of Conservative Judaism to ease a desperate shortage of rabbis abroad and in non-metropolitan centers of the South and Midwest was made by Rabbi Wolfe Kelman, executive vice president of the Rabbinical Assembly of America, at the fifty-ninth annual convention. Recruitment of young men for the rabbinate was called a major need to be met by the rabbinate and the communities in which they serve.

Rabbi Kelman called for scholarships, tuition aid and for encouragement and academic aid by rabbis and the community for eligible young men. He said that England, Ireland, and Latin-American countries were seeking rabbis through the Assembly.

The shortage, according to Rabbi Kelman, stems from a desire by rabbinical students to return to their home communities, or to a metropolitan center, to areas where intensive religious educational facilities are available for their children and from the sharp rise in Conservative congregations in suburban areas.

The establishment of synagogues in the suburbs has taken a large number of young rabbis who might otherwise have moved to more remote centers, says the New York Times. He said 150 Conservative congregations throughout the United States and Canada were seeking rabbis. In each of these cases he said the community was in a non-metropolitan area.

Rabbi Kelman suggested that the communities need to be made aware of the importance of organizing day schools that could serve as a preliminary training ground for students who later could go on to the seminary. "Such educational programs," he said, "will have the additional advantage of attracting young rabbis concerned about the education of their own children to accept pulpits in these communities in the years ahead."

Two rabbinical scholars examined contemporary religion and came up with varying estimates of the future of man's relation to God. Speaking in Yiddish to the convention of the Rabbinical Assembly of America, Dr. Abraham J. Heschel, Professor of Jewish Ethics and Mysticism at the Jewish Theological Seminary, said there were periods in history when faith cannot be regained through quiet insight, but rather "through embarrassment, shock and dismay at our immense callousness."

First Graduates Of Einstein Medical College Take Geneva Vow, Not Usual Oath

The Albert Einstein College of Medicine of Yeshiva University, in New York, held its first commencement exercises on its sixteen-acre campus at Morris Park Avenue and Eastchester Road, the Bronx, N. Y. It was the first graduation at a new medical school in New York since 1902, when the Cornell Medical School gave medical degrees to its first class.

In a large tent on the campus, 3,000 persons witnessed the awarding of Doctor of Medicine degrees to fifty men and women, says the New York Times. Instead of the 2,000-year-old Hippocratic Oath, the graduates chanted in unison the Declaration of Geneva, a statement of ethic and principle, in which genocide is foresworn.

Introducing the declaration, Dean Marcus D. Kogel said of the Hippocratic oath, "Few nobler thoughts have ever been uttered." But he pointed out that its original language is no longer spoken and the gods it addressed are no longer worshipped. "Our modern society," he said, "has imposed additional requirements, and it is necessary to exact from the physician a pledge not to use his medical knowledge to further the crime of genocide. The Oath of Hippocrates does not contain this pledge . . ."

The Declaration of Geneva reads:

I solemnly pledge myself to consecrate my life to the service of humanity.
I will give to my teachers the respect and gratitude which is their due;
I will practice my profession with conscience and dignity;
The health of my patient will be my first consideration;
I will respect the secrets which are confided in me;
I will maintain by all the means in my power, the honor and the noble tradition of the medical profession;
My colleagues will be my brothers;
I will not permit considerations of religion, nationality, race, party politics or social standing to intervene between my duty and my patient;
I will maintain the utmost respect for human life, from the time of conception; even under threat, I will not use my medical knowledge contrary to the laws of humanity.
I make these promises solemnly, freely and upon my honor.

Dr. Samuel Belkin, president of Yeshiva University, of which the medical college is a part, said that the late Dr. Einstein, "though a non-conformist," was "one of the greatest moralists of our time . . ." Dr. Einstein believed, Dr. Belkin said, "that the search for unity and integration in man which is an indivisible part of medical education, is even of greater importance than the search for unity in the physical cosmos, says the New York Times. "Eradicating disease is not enough, he said: "Our lives must above all become spiritually and morally purposeful."

Dr. Marcus D. Kogel, dean of the medical school and former Commissioner of Hospitals, administered the oath. The exercises ended with the reading of a twelfth-century prayer written by the famous physician and religious philosopher, Rabbi Moses Maimonides, by Dr. Leo Davidoff, grand marshal of the ceremonies.

The medical college, the first established in the U.S. under Jewish auspices, received its

Report Repression Of Jewish Religion Stepped Up By Soviet

The Kremlin was reported to have recently stepped up its campaign against the practice of the Jewish religion in the Soviet Union.

According to information at United Nations, N. Y., the repressive measures are centered in the Ukraine. However, they have also been reported from many parts of the Soviet Union, including Irkutsk, in eastern Siberia, where the first floor of a synagogue was recently confiscated to provide housing for medical students.

The Kremlin recently resumed its campaign against the practice of any form of religion, and it is not yet clear to what extent the Jewish religion has been singled out, says the New York Times. In any event, the making of matzoh (unleavened bread) for the recent celebration of the Passover was forbidden in the leading Ukrainian cities of Kharkov, Odessa, and Kiev as well as in Kuibyshev and Rostov, in European Russia. Although they made difficulties, the authorities finally permitted matzoh to be baked in Moscow and Leningrad.

In Kharkov, the twenty small Jewish groups were dispersed last September during the second day of the Jewish New Year celebrations. All the Torahs (Books of Scripture) were confiscated and a policeman told one of the Jews, "You are eating Russian bread but praying for Israel."

This was in line with an article denouncing "the reactionary essence of the Judaean religion," which appeared last December in the Lvov Pravda. The article recalled that when Jews eat unleavened bread at Passover they express the hope that they will eat it the following year "in Jerusalem, on Israel soil," and added: "However, don't the religious Jews know that Israel is at present an obedient tool in the hands of American, British and French imperialists?"

Although this article had only regional circulation, the February, 1959, issues of Partinaya Zhizn, the monthly magazine of the Communist party, called the attention of members to it. Last September another Ukrainian newspaper, Prikarpatska Pravda of Stanislav, printed an article attacking a Jew who had allegedly forged signatures of non-Jews to a petition asking the establishment of Jewish worship groups, says the New York Times. The article accused him of having falsely claimed service in the Red Army during the war against Hitler, and made a general condemnation of "the leaders of Judaism in Stanislav," as "ardent liars and forgers."

Other measures reported to have been taken in the Ukraine against the practice of the Jewish religion include the following:

In Novoselitsa, in the Province of Chernovtsy, two buildings that had been used as synagogues were confiscated and turned into club houses.

In Olevsk, small Jewish religious groups, which had been permitted since the synagogue was converted into a school in 1949, have all been disbanded in recent months.

In Vinnitsa, the synagogue has been confiscated and Jews are

• JEWISH GENERAL HOSPITAL •

Montreal's failure to make good the previous administration's commitment of $600,000 towards the construction program was deplored at the 25th annual meeting. In his report, the president, Philip Garfinkle, said both Mayor Sarto Fournier and Jean-Marie Savignac, executive committee chairman, had previously acknowledged the city's moral obligation to fulfill the commitment. Thus far, he added, "we have had no relief in this regard. This "indifference", he continued, leaves the Hospital in serious financial position for borrowed principal and interest involved in the recent $3,000,000 capital expansion program which has completely expanded and modernized facilities, and boosted capacity to 400 beds. The city was called upon by the executive director, Samuel S. Cohen, to relieve the financial burden incurred in the Out-Patient clinics on behalf of the indigent. More than 79,000 visits to the clinics were recorded in 1958, an increase of 6,255 over 1957, and a new record for volume of service. Mr. Cohen said there were 8,221 admissions and 81,666 days of care rendered. Of those admitted, 68.3 percent were Hebrew; 16.3, Roman Catholic; 12.1, Protestant; and other religions accounted for the remaining 3.2 percent. "The birth of 1,580 infants was accomplished without a maternal death," the executive director continued. "And in this year we passed the 25,000 mark in the number of consecutive births with a maternal mortality rate of zero". It was also announced that the new psychiatric ward with facilities for day patients and occupational therapy has been opened. The department was recently accorded recognition by McGill University as a training center for residents in psychiatry. The honorary treasurer, Samuel Steinberg, reported the greatest gross and net deficits in the Hospital's history, declaring that the gross operating loss of $977,008.74 was reduced by allocations from Combined Jewish Appeal and other special grants to a net deficit of $592,079.89. In 1957, these figures were $687,563.54 and $299,216.83 respectively. The treasurer referred to the Hospital's continued alteration program as a reason for failure of revenue to keep pace with higher costs. Other contributing factors were: increased salaries; higher cost of food, supplies, and research; the burden imposed by inadequate government payment for hospitalized indigents; absence of subsidies for out-patients. Two plans to help offset a financial crisis were announced. The first is a Life Governor's scheme, open to both men and women who have previously contributed to the Hospital's building funds, upon payment of a qualifying fee. The second is a gifts and bequests fund. Mr. Garfinkle referred to the community health survey, which aims to integrate health facilities for more efficient service to the community. He mentioned the creation of a medical center for patients of categories, acute and chronic. Reports were presented by Dr. Harry C. Ballon, retiring chairman of the medical board, and by Mrs. Marie Samson, acting director of nursing. Returned to the board of administration are: Mr. Garfinkle, Dr. Andre Aisenstadt, Ben Beutel, Allan Bronfman, honorary president; Louis Reitman, Lionel Rubin; to the board of trustees: Henry Benson, Maxwell Cummings, chairman, Maurice Gross, Maxwell M. Kalman, Ben Wilanski, Arthur Pascal, vice-chairman. Dr. Leonard J. Brandt, of New York, has been appointed physician-in-chief. Born in the United States in 1918, Dr. Brandt received his medical degree from Long Island College of Medicine, and interned in Mount Sinai Hospital, in Cleveland, Ohio. During the Second World War, he served as a medical officer in the U.S. armed forces. He went to Puerto Rico as a research associate with the department of medical zoology, School of tropical Medicine, (Columbia). Dr. Brandt was an instructor and post-graduate fellow in Long Island College; in medicine at the New York College of Medicine; and associate professor of medicine at the State University of New York. He will be full-time director of the department of medicine in September. Dr. Michael A. Gold, who has been acting physician-in-chief, returns to private practice, maintaining association with the Hospital.

Is Intermarriage Inevitable?

BY DR. JOSEPH R. ROSENBLOOM, RABBI OF TEMPLE ADATH ISRAEL, IN LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY; INSTRUCTOR IN ANCIENT LANGUAGES AND LITERATURE AT THE UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY; B'NAI B'RITH HILLEL FOUNDATION COUNSELOR ON THE CAMPUS

One of the most serious problem areas of the American Jewish community is that involving intermarriage. Apparently it is most crucial in smaller communities, but indications from the few statistics available indicate that the problem is really national.

Lexington, Kentucky, may be typical of the smaller American Jewish communities. There are 1,000 Jews there, in a population of 125,000. They are chiefly business people, with a large percentage of physicians and university teachers, since the area contains a state university and three mental hospitals.

During a recent two-year period, 12 marriages were performed by the two local rabbis. In eight of the 12 unions, one of the mates was non-Jewish. Seven involved Jewish men and non-Jewish women; of the latter, six converted to Judaism. Looking now at the 200 families of the Reform Temple, we see that 28, or 14%, are intermarried. In all but three of these families, the children of religious school age attend the Temple Sunday School. Many intermarried couples are not affiliated with either Jewish congregation.

These figures may appear high, but it is interesting to note that they are approximately the same as those of Washington, D. C., where 11% of the Jewish households have one non-Jewish partner. In 8%, the husband was Jewish; in 3%, the wife. In 66% of these intermarried families, the children were not being reared as Jews; in 25%, they were; and in 9%, one child was being reared as a Jew while another was not. Commenting upon this study in the 1958 American Jewish Yearbook, Alvin Chenkin states, "The evidence seems clear that intermarriage, in its long term results, represents an 'invisible loss' to the Jewish community."

As one might suspect, this problem is not limited to the Jewish community of the United States. According to the 1956 American Jewish Yearbook, mixed marriages in Canada doubled during the the period 1926-1953 — from 6.6% to 12.1%. They were higher in sparsely settled areas (34% in sparse British Columbia and 12.6% in more heavily populated Ontario, during the period 1951-1953), and lower in Quebec, which is predominantly Catholic, and where there is relatively little intimate social contact (5.5% for the same period).

Somewhat more extreme are the figures for Australia, The Netherlands, and Switzerland. In Australia, where the Jewish community is small and remote, 23% of the households there in 1921 were intermarried. These unions made up 15% of the country's marriages involving Jews in 1933 (1956 AJ Yearbook). In The Netherlands, 3100 of 7000 families include a non-Jewish mate. Forty-two percent of these belong to no religious community (AJ Yearbook, 1957, 1958). In Switzerland, of the 3537 Jewish families residing there in 1950, 1240 were the result of mixed marriages. This compares with 776 of 3572 families in 1941. In 1953 there were 102 mixed marriages performed, while those involving only Jews numbered 80. In 1954 there were 78 mixed marriages, compared to 70 where both partners were Jewish (1956 AJ Yearbook).

Some comfort may be derived from the fact that similar statistics may be found for non-Jewish religious groups. It was reported at the 1956 National Catholic Conference on Family Life that between one-fourth and one-third of all marriages involving Catholics were mixed unions. This was recognized by them as a threat to the faith of the Catholic spouse and the religious training of their children. This tends to be verified from a limited study of 32 couples living in University of Kentucky student housing where at least one partner was Catholic. Fifteen of these 32 couples were intermarried. In five of these cases the non-Catholic converted; in five, the Catholic partner attends church; in the remaining five, there is no longer any association with the Catholic Church. It is believed that 40% of the children of such mixed marriages are lost to the Catholic Church.

From these figures some of the problems of intermarriage are apparent. There seems to be a distinct loss to every group involved. These losses take place irrespective of geographical location or religion. From a survival point of view, it demands the attention of the Jewish people. Some of the questions which must be asked are:

Can intermarriage be prevented? Is a continued rise in the rate of intermarriage inevitable in the United States? Will such a rise, if it takes place, sound the death knell of Judaism in America? What should be the attitude toward conversion and converts?

The answers to the first two questions may be found in our society. In America, the Jew has found a virtual social and political paradise. No other society has permitted him such freedom. And this is good. But one must recognize that this free society has facilitated the intermingling of persons of varying religious, ethnic, and racial groups — and when this happens, relationships leading to marriage are inevitable. We must therefore conclude that the trend toward intermarriage will continue and probably accelerate.

The general freedom of our society is reflected in our Jewish religious institutions, and it is this voluntaryism which makes it impossible to prevent intermarriages. Parental and group pressures, while still operative, are certainly of less significance than during the days of the European ghetto, when a Jew could ill afford to stand alone against his community. In 20th century America, however, this is not the case, and it is very unlikely that any such pressures could prevent a relatively mature person from entering an intermarriage.

The traditions and history of the Jewish people indicate an ambivalent attitute toward intermarriage. The Bible affirms its existence over 3,000 years ago, with some of our greatest heroes marrying non-Jews: Joseph married Asenath, and Moses married Zip-

Poor Pitofsky Clan: Nothing But Boys For Over 100 Years!

Unto the seventh generation and the forty-seventh son, the Pitofsky clan's claim to genetic fame remains unchallenged: it produces nothing but boys.

"There's nothing at all wrong with boys — they're all wonderful," Louis Pitofsky, sixty-six-year-old head of the family, said after the birth of his eighth grandson at New York Lying-In Hospital. "I have no regrets — but I guess youngsters like variety. So a couple of years ago I made a promise, $5,000 to the first girl born to one of my three sons. Frankly, I feel it was a safe promise to make — but if they should turn up with a girl, I'll be stuck — and delighted, of course."

Himself an only child and the father of three sons who are now the fathers of eight sons, writes Judith Crist in the New York Herald Tribune, Mr. Pitofsky says it was ever thus back to his father, one of two sons; his grandfather, one of five; and his great-grandfather, an only child. "Not a sister, not a daughter in seven generations."

His newest grandchild was born to Mrs. Jerome Pitofsky. It was his son Jerome's fourth son. Another son, Sandy, has two sons and a third, Robert, has two, the younger born last April 17, when the Pitofsky record came to light. At that time it was reported that Mr. Pitofsky had posted a $5,000 bond in the name of "Miss Pitofsky" — a name unapplied in more than a century. He explained that "there was nothing that formal — just a promise," but a promise that he would be delightfully surprised, but nonetheless pleased, to keep.

"You can't figure this thing," Mr. Pitofsky said. "Even take the girls my boys married — Sandy's wife has a brother, Robert's is an only child, but Jerry's has a sister. You think it matters? There's just no basis for figuring these things out. They say the odds are 10,000,000 to one against a thing like this going on, so I'd say we're a bit unusual. There are a lot of bets being made on the side every time a baby's due in our family."

But despite his $5,000 offer, says the New York Herald Tribune, Mr. Pitofsky himself feels it would be "sacrilegious even to hope" that the next child be a girl. "All I hope and pray for is that the mother and baby do well." At the moment there are no new Pitofskys in prospect.

IS INTERMARRIAGE INEVITABLE?

porah. However, both Isaac and Jacob were sent to their kinsmen in order that they might marry among their own. The pleas of Samson's father and mother sound quite contemporary when they asked of their son: "Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines?" Apparently not, for Samson answered, saying: "Get her for me; for she pleaseth me well."

The Bible also records the opposition of Ezra and Nehemiah to intermarriage; they even insisted on the dissolution of those which were already consumated. They feared for the integrity of the small and poor Jewish community of Palestine as it was following the Babylonian exile. On the other hand, we read of the Moabitess, Ruth, who is the Biblical symbol of faithfulness and whom Jewish tradition equates with Rachel and Leah. The son of her union with Boaz was a direct ancestor of David, and by implication we are asked to realize the loss which would have been incurred had she been lost to Judaism.

In the Talmud we learn that marriage between a Jew and a non-Jew is forbidden unless the non-Jew accepts Judaism before the marriage takes place. In those days one became a Jew not through a long waiting period and a course of study, but males were circumcised and ritually immersed, and females were ritually immersed. The Talmud further states that a convert is not acceptable if his only motivation is marriage.

Intermarriage with Christians in the Middle Ages was specifically prohibited by the church. As early as the 4th century, the laws of Constantius prohibited marriages between Jewish men and Christian women. Somewhat later, this was expanded to prohibit all marriages between Jews and Christians. Innocent III decreed in the 13th century that Jews should wear distinguishable clothing in order to prevent Christians from unknowingly marrying Jews.

This attitude was matched by Jewish leaders discouraging intermarriage. Moses of Coucy in Southern France encouraged and even forced some Jews of Spain and France in the 13th century to divorce their Christian and Moslem wives. David Einhorn, an early leader of American Reform Judaism, once said: " . . . intermarriage drives a nail in the coffin of Judaism." In 1909 the Central Conference of America Rabbis condemned mixed marriages (where the non-Jews does not convert to Judaism) as contrary to the traditions of Judaism. Today the majority of Reform rabbis will not perform mixed marriages. There are many Jewish families today who reject children and relatives who have married non-Jews, whether they converted or not.

In the light of these facts, is intermarriage something to be feared? From the figures cited above,

Rabbi Wilfred Shuchat officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white peau de soie and lace, embroidered with seed-pearl-beads and sequins; with a fitted bodice and wide neckline; and a bouffant skirt ending in a chapel train. Her fingertip-length veil of tulle illusion was fastened to a coronet of matching lace and she carried a lace fan covered with cymbidium orchids and stephanotis. Sisters of the bride, Miss Susan Ronna Kirsch, as maid of honour, and Miss Nancy Margaret Kirsch, as bridesmaid, wore embroidered organza over blue taffeta; with coronets of stephanotis and cornflowers. They carried fans covered with these flowers. Robert Smulowitz, of Wilkes-Barre, Penn., acted as best man for his brother-in-law. The ushers were Stephen Levy and Hillel Schwartz. Standards of giant chrysanthemums, white Shasta daisies, yellow carnations, and cornflowers were the wedding decorations. For the reception the home of the bride's parents was decorated with white Shasta daisies, stephanotis, and cornflowers. Mrs. Leonard Kirsch, mother of the bride, was gowned in aquamarine-blue mousseline de soie, and had a matching hat of net and flowers; and a corsage bouquet of white baby orchids and stephanotis. Mrs. Lach, mother of the groom, was gowned in beige chiffon, and had a velvet hat to match, and a corsage of bronze-coloured orchids pinned to her handbag. Mr. and Mrs. Barry Lach spent their wedding trip in Miami Beach, Florida, the bride travelling in a white cashmere ensemble; with a white hat; and a corsage bouquet of white orchids. Here for the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. Robert Smulowitz, of Wilkes-Barre, Penn.; Dr. and Mrs. Edward Kirsch and sons, Robert and Peter; and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Rosenthal, all of New York; and Joseph Lubotta, of Toronto, Ont.

RABBINATE ASSEMBLY CONSERVATIVE

"This is a time to cry out," Dr. Heschel said. "One is ashamed to be human. One is embarrassed to be called religious in the face of our failure to keep alive the image of God in man. We see the writing on the wall, but are too illiterate to understand what it says."

In a survey of current theological trends, Rabbi David W. Silverman, of Riverdale, N. Y., said it was the great hope of our time that the "precision and suppleness of modern thought" may arouse conceptual reforms that would renew and clarify man's relation to God.

Rabbi Silverman said a recently accelerated drive toward the dissolution of Jewish theology had now been reversed, and that an "era of religious discovery which has been heralded by an increasing ferment in theology may be upon us."

Dr. Heschel took the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the death of Rabbi Mendel, of Kotsk, a great Chassidic scholar who lived in Poland and was the foremost exponent of "a theology of dismay," to comment on religion and contemporary man.

"Little does religion ask of contemporary man," Dr. Heschel said. "It is ready to offer; it has no courage to challenge; it is ready to offer edification; it has no courage to break the idols, to shatter the callousness.

"The trouble is that religion has become 'religion' — institution, dogma, security. It offers neither drama nor exaltation; it engenders neither judgment nor repentance. Its acceptance involves neither risk nor strain. Religion is regarded as one of the amenities of Western civilization." Dr. Heschel said such religion was idolatry, "a distortion of the word God," says the New York Times. Religion's authentic role, he said, lay in being a challenge to civilization.

The Assembly, after unlimited debate, adopted a resolution continuing the joint Conference of the faculty of the Jewish Theological Seminary and the Rabbinical Assembly as the only official national instrument within the Conservative movement for dealing with questions of Jewish laws of marriage.

Under the resolution the Conference will be governed by a steering committee, which will establish a system of marriage counseling and other media for preserving Jewish family life.

It will also continue the National Beth Din, or Jewish court set up six years ago, to deal with problems of Jewish marriage and family relations.

The Rabbinical Assembly voted to publish the first official high holiday prayer book for the Conservative movement. The Assembly, national organization of the Conservative Jewish rabbinate instructed its executive Council that the manuscript be owned by the Assembly and that it be produced textually in harmony with the Rabbinical Assembly Prayer Book for the Sabbath and festivals. There are 1,000,000 Conservative Jews in the United States and Canada.

The Assembly, after protacted discussion, voted to produce the new prayer book through its Prayer Book Commission. It hailed the individual creativity of its members, but stipulated that no prayer book produced by an individual, now or in the future, was to receive the official endorsement of the Rabbinical Assembly of America.

The high holiday prayer books now in widest use are those edited and translated by Rabbi Morris Silverman, of Hartford, and the late Herman Adler, former chief rabbi of the British Empire; and Phillip Birnbaum, of Wilmington, Del.

The Assembly went on record against Sunday closing laws, says the New York Times. It declared that they were a violation of the principle of separation of church and state. The Assembly added, however, that where local option makes it constitutional observers of the Sabbath and others who observe any day other than Sunday be exempted from such legislation.

In acknowledging his re-election, Rabbi Klein pledged to seek closer cooperation with the members of the Reform and Orthodox Rabbinates in all areas of Jewish, religious life. He said the Assembly would seek during the year to interest young promising students to choose fields in religion for their life's work. He said this would be a service to the community as well as for "sensitive souls to find self-fulfillment in the service of God and their fellow men."

The assembly elected to the Executive Council for three years: Rabbi Samuel Burstein, formerly of Ottawa, Ont., now of Hazelton, Pa.; Rabbi Maurice S. Cohen, Montreal; among others.

IS INTERMARRIAGE INEVITABLE?

noting the losses of children and Jewish affiliation in The Netherlands and in Washington, D. C., it would seem that there is indeed much to fear. Looking back on the experience of fifty years past in Europe is not encouraging. In Hungary, between 1896 and 1902, of 701 intermarried couples, 601 agreed to bring their children up as Christians. Intermarriage and assimilation reduced the Jewish population there from 215,000 in 1920 to 150,000 in 1936 ("Modern Jewish Problems," by Roland B. Gittelsohn). Intermarriage increased in Hungary from 2.7% in 1895 to 12% in 1929, and in Germany from 8% in 1901 to 22.4% in 1930 ("The Jews In The Modern World," by Arthur Ruppin).

It is also said that, aside from the losses which religious groups incur through intermarriage there is also great damage done to family life, particularly to the children of such unions. A recent Maryland study of 12,000 young people indicated that where both parents were Protestant, 5.8% of the parents were separated, and for Catholics, 6.4%. Where there was a mixed marriage the divorce rate jumped to 15.2%, and where there was no religion it was 18.7%.

While many people seem concerned with the accelerated rate of intermarriage among Jewish people, little is being done. Facts and figures are few and far between. Perhaps the losses are not as great as they seem. Perhaps intermarriage is not as prevalent generally as it is in certain communities. Perhaps those converting are becoming sincere Jews and rearing their children to be knowledgeable and loyal Jews. On the other hand, if we are losing great numbers of our people through intermarriage, and if we think that this is destroying Judaism, and if we believe that this is not desirable, then we must develop a constructive approach to this increasing problem.

Sephardic Jews Are Important To Business Life Of Belgian Congo

A massive house of worship, its orange-brown brick walls topped with a severe gray roof, dominates the flower-trimmed Avenue Tabora of Elizabethville, Belgian Congo. It is the Sephardic Synagogue, one of the most impressive synagogues in Africa. Its congregation of nearly 2,000 is made up of Sephardic Jews — Jews whose ancestors lived in Spain or Portugal. Those in Elisabethville went there not from the Iberian Peninsula, however, but from the Mediterranean.

The island of Rhodes was originally home to most of the Jewish community, says the New York Times. Its members play an important and generally respected part in the business life of the Belgian Congo's second largest city. Elisabethville's population of about 125,000 including 12,000 to 16,000 Europeans, makes it about one-third the size of Leopoldville, but its percentage of whites is higher.

Rabbi Moise M. Levy is the leader of the congregation. Its members mostly speak Spanish. A gentle old man, wearing the traditional skull cap, explained to a visitor that he had come there from Buenos Aires in 1911, the year after Elisabethville was founded.

In the classic Sephardic tradition, the altar of the synagogue is in the center of the main floor instead of at one end. Male worshippers sit in pews forming a hollow rectangle around the altar, with its Torah, or law-bearing scroll. There is a balcony for women; the sexes do not mingle during services.

The solid, neatly kept building, with a Hebrew inscription over the door, seemed out of place in a Central African city where, the same morning, a spitting cobra was killed in a downtown street. Yet the inside was reminiscent of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue at Seventieth Street and Central Park West, in New York.

The Elisabethville telephone directory contains twelve listings for Alhadeff, including two for M. J. Alhadeff. Maurice J. Alhadeff lives in Leopoldville but has business interests there. He is regarded as a leader of the Jewish community, says the New York Times. The odd thing is that Mr. Alhadeff, born in Rhodes sixty-four years ago, also has business and residential addresses in New York and is a naturalized United States citizen. The business address, he said, is listed as Merco, Inc., 1441 Broadway. Mr. Alhadeff's brother Victor runs the company, an import-export enterprise.

Mr. Alhadeff once served as honorary Consul of Israel at Elizabethville. He also heads the Congo section of the Alliance Israelite Universelle. What appears to give him the most pleasure is his sponsorship of native painting.

Mr. Alhadeff, born in Rhodes had taken one lesson from a Canadian painter in New York in the Nineteen Forties and had rented a house in Freeport, L. I., to indulge his hobby. But he acknowledged that he had not progressed to his satisfaction. When he brought back to the Congo a painting of his of a Central Park scene, he found it inspired several young Congolese.

They gave it a "tropical interpretation," he said, yet "one of them just got the atmosphere of New York with a little mist, when you can hardly see the buildings." Under Mr. Alhadeff's tutelage, the Congolese painters have turned out hundreds of works notable for vivid colors, says the New York Times. Mr. Alhadeff has sold many in his own arts shop. He keeps many more in his home on the Rue Congolaise in Leopoldville.

FIRST GRADUATES OF EINSTEIN COLLEGE

charter in 1951 from the State Board of Regents. In 1953, the late Albert Einstein agreed to the use of his name for the Institution. In 1955, the college opened to the students who just received their degrees.

The College, with its network of buildings, is the core of a large medical center costing more than $150,000,000 and having a bed capacity of 4,400.

Dr. Samuel Belkin, president of Yeshiva University, gave the commencement address. He advised the graduates to be considerate with their patients. "By your infinite patience, you will experience compassion and kindness and you will attain a broader and deeper understanding of man in his totality," he said.

"Never in the intellectual history of mankind has there been such an intensive attempt to search for the integration, interdependency, and unity of all branches of human knowledge as in our present age."

Dean Kogel cited the extensive advances in medical knowledge in the last few years, but he cautioned against complacency and "smug satisfaction with the past." He declared that "students, to be good physicians, must be reared in a climate where creative research is in progress," adding that "they should have the opportunity to rub elbows and exchange thoughts with men and women who are shaping the medicine and science of tomorrow."

REPORT SOVIET REPRESSION

now praying in an abandoned building.

In Korosten a year ago the Jewish community, having saved a considerable sum for a synagogue, was unable to obtain an official permit but built it anyway. The building was confiscated and an appeal to Moscow was rejected.

Other examples, from many parts of the Soviet Union, were said to be as follows:

In Yevpatoriya, in the Crimea, the authorities confiscated 25,000 rubles raised by the Jewish community to rent a building for a synagogue.

In Baranovichi, in Byelorussia, the great synagogue has been taken over for use by the State Security Committee. Since then the authorities have not permitted the rabbi to function and have forbidden ritual cattle slaughter or any other exercise of the Jewish religion.

In Tula, 150 miles south of Moscow, use of the synagogue, which was in a communal apartment, was forbidden because a non-Jewish resident informed authorities that he was disturbed by the prayers. The synagogue in Orenburg, 750 miles southeast of Moscow, also has been closed recently.

In Rybnitsa, in Bessarabia, there is widespread fear that the synagogue will close shortly, says the New York Times. In Rakhov, in Transcarpathia, the two synagogues that remained open have been confiscated and turned into stores.

In New York, The Rev. Dr. Leo Jung, leader of the Jewish Center of New York City and president of the Jewish Academy of Arts and Sciences, warned that, despite Soviet statements to the contrary, there "appears to be a tragic determination to destroy the Judaism of our brethren behind the Iron Curtain."

Dr. Jung spoke at the annual national dinner of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America. He said the Soviet Union was pursuing a course of destroying Judaism by "constant pressures upon the religious Jews by government fiat, leading to individual assimilation and group extinction."

Bank of Montreal Introduces New Consumer-Finance Loan Plan

Introduced by the Bank of Montreal of a new type of life-insured, consumer-finance loan, whereby all credit purchases can be consolidated under one single comprehensive plan, on a monthly repayment basis, was announced by G. Arnold Hart, B of M president.

The loans will be offered under the "Bank of Montreal Family Finance Plan", at all of the bank's 781 Canadian offices, Mr. Hart said. Under the new plan, personal loans up to $3,500 can be obtained for practically any purpose, with repayment scheduled over periods up to three years, where required. All loans will be life-insured automatically.

Many loans will be entirely unsecured, Mr. Hart added but chattel-mortgages and other types of security may be taken where such collateral is usual. Principal consideration in providing credit under the new plan will be the customer's ability to repay from regular income, over the period agreed upon and without hardship.

Interest will be six per cent a year on the actual outstanding balance, plus a charge to cover the cost of processing and service, Mr. Hart explained, adding, "The overall cost to the customer of a loan under the new plan is lower than generally prevails for consumer-financing in Canada and is particularly attractive for a life-insured loan."

The B of M plan includes a special feature which Mr. Hart referred to as "ever-ready credit". Under this provision, the customer may arrange for a standby personal credit, based on his income and commitments, and available for his use at any time. He is thus free to make purchases at will and issue cheques on the spot up to the limit of his prearranged credit.

"The bank's new plan will by no means be restricted to loans for the purchase of items normally bought on instalments, but will also be readily available for many other purposes such as medical and dental bills, education expenses and vacation costs," Mr. Hart said. "Neither," he added, "will the plan be confined to purely family purchases, but will be equally at the disposal of the single person."

What The Joiners, The Do-Gooders Of A Community Accomplish

BY FLORENCE HUFNER, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED JEWISH WELFARE FUND OF TORONTO

In the 1920's, the word "Babbit" came into our language, to denote a middle class, bustling, back-slapping, hail-fellow-well-met personality. We dismissed friends and enemies alike with one epithet, and retired to our own aloof, intellectual towers. From the name of the man, the organizations with which he was identified, also became symbols for satire. Today, the words "joiner" and "belonger" have become derisive terms to describe the average American.

Max Lerner in "America As A Civilization" points out that when the intellectuals speak scornfully of Americans as joiners, they usually forget to include themselves; and points to the large number of academic organizations in the United States as compared to Europe. However, returning to the membership of fraternal societies, women's clubs and youth organizations, it is estimated that at least one hundred million Americans belong to some kind of national organization; many more millions belong to local clubs, neighbourhood centres and associations. When you join a group, whether it is the Rotarians, or a country club, it is the result of a voluntary, associative process.

Many social scientists, analyzing the American scene, have pointed to the factors in our culture which have led to this mass movement towards joining a group. The flux and change of economic and social life on this continent have made for cultural loneliness unknown in a set society where a man's position was part of the hierarchy of a feudal state. It is this striving for a position in society beyond his job, for status in a community in which his own role has become uncertain, which urges the average man to join a group.

Mr. Lerner states that the American joins associations for a number of reasons: to "get ahead", to "meet people", to "make contacts", to "get something done", to "learn something", or to "fill his life." These diverse aims, some from self-interest, and others from other-interest, make for the variety of organizations which fill the American scene. The community minded man who is able to transcend his own self-interests, and wishes to devote himself to the betterment of his fellow-men, his community, joins the groups which have come to be known as the service or philanthropic organizations. Among these groups are those associated with the three great religious communities, Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish, which have their own welfare, recreational, and hospital institutions; and also those which cut across religious lines such as the Community Chest, Social Planning Council and the area planning councils.

The people who join the boards and committees of social welfare organizations are usually those who would like to "get something done." They are the ones who have an emotional or intellectual drive to give of themselves to other people, to their community. They are usually motivated by other-interest. They see misery in the midst of boom; heart-break in a run-away city where neighbour no longer knows, or is concerned about neighbour; neglect surrounded by pleasure; and they want to do "something." This "something" translates itself into committee work, fund-raising drives, bodies for civic reform, and the joiner unites with people of similar interests, all interested in doing something. They are people who are not ashamed of allowing their bleeding hearts to run away with their bloody heads. On the contrary, they are proud of their humane fellow-feeling. They know that if a human being somewhere is suffering, they also suffer; that every man is inextricably linked with all other men.

It is these joiners or do-gooders who become responsible for changing the face of their community, who have transformed many areas of American life. They have been responsible for the abolition of child labour; advances in medical research; anti-discrimination laws to protect minority groups. They have formed the vanguard in the present program for greater social security measures.

The joiner personality has been the subject of many theories. Whether it is the result of a disjointed society which has created social vacuums, or of the American drive pattern which places a rewarding premium on activity, there is also a concomitant result for the joiner; the expansion of his own personality. A society which bottles up this gregarious instinct or drive, for voluntary association with fellow-men, usually develops in a totalitarian pattern. Mr. Lerner reports that after World War II, students of German society, reviewing the Nazi regime, thought they could trace a connection between "the lesser role of such voluntary groups in Germany and the rise of Totalitarianism." One of the great democratic rights we enjoy in Canada is the privilege of joining, for social self-interest, mutual help, or in the interest of others. Even in the latter instance of joining, the act of helping others is also the act of helping ourselves.

The elimination of a slum area makes our own city a finer place in which to live and reduces the incidence of juvenile delinquency, disease, and social disorder which affects all our lives from upper to lower classes. The activities of a parent-teacher association which brings parents and teaching staff into closer contact for closer harmony and better understanding of educational methods, raises the standards of education for all children. The fund-raising drive of a community brings more programs of social welfare within the reach of all. Medical research into the causes and control of cancer, polio, heart disease, arthritis and the like brings its benefits to all sections of the community.

And these are the accomplishments of the joiners, the do-gooders of a community.

ON THE THRESHOLD

Address delivered in Hebrew at the 25th anniversary of the Daniel Sieff Institute, first unit of the Weizmann Institute of Science in Israel

BY PRIME MINISTER DAVID BEN-GURION, OF ISRAEL

Now, after the passage of many years, it can be told: I am one of those who came to Palestine, over fifty years ago, with the Second Aliya. I remember the many discussions we had, the unmarried men and women, whether it was worthwhile to build our homes and establish our families. For we feared that our children would be retarded. These fears were based on the conditions then prevailing. The Hebrew we spoke was "primitive". No scientific and educational literature was in existence. The country was poor; not even one newspaper was published, if one may classify the press as a medium of culture.

However, our fears proved unfounded. Our young generation has produced scientists who are well known not only in this small country but also in scientific circles all over the world. We are thankful for the courage and vision, the persistency and faith of our pioneers who came to Palestine. This same spirit also prevailed in the hearts of our loyal supporters in the Diaspora, friends who dared to dream. One of these dreams was to transform this wild and desolated area into a land of science.

In the courageous and wonderful creation of the Weizmann Institute, Dr. Chaim Weizmann, the man who more than anyone else was responsible for the establishment of the State of Israel, provided the vision. Together with him in its realization were his faithful friends in world Jewry, and particularly in Great Britain. The Sieff, Marks, and Sacher families, wishing to commemorate the death of the young Daniel Sieff, conceived the idea of establishing a monument in a land where memories are sustained for thousands of years. Thus the Daniel Sieff Research Institute was born. But that was just the beginning of this magnificent Weizmann Institute, where the living spirit of Dr. Weizmann still exists.

Israel is a small country. Its potentialities are limited and the number of its inhabitants is few. But its scientific achievements are of the highest. Israel is recognized today as one of the leading nations in the pursuit of scientific research and the probing of the secrets of nature. She is indeed among the first in this field, as well as in the creation of a new society where human heroism — both physical and spiritual — is being revealed to an extent perhaps unparalleled in other countries.

In the name of the Government of Israel and the people of Israel, I wish to express our admiration to those who twenty-five years ago extended their aid in establishing this Institute, which is on the threshold of new and greater accomplishments.
